Inter Faith Week – evaluating and learning for the future

Monitoring and evaluating is not exciting but it is good to do! It can help you as you think about planning an even more successful event in the future and it may also help you demonstrate to your users and funders the impact of your work.

At the outset of planning, decide what you want your event to achieve; monitor it; and then later evaluate to see how well you judge it has met your objectives. Even if an event has not gone 100% as you hoped, it can be an opportunity to learn and grow. And very often, evaluation will show that events have gone even better than people hoped!

Look to gather basic information such as:

Number of people attending

What was the drop-out rate, if you had pre-registration

Diversity of attended	25
-----------------------	----

	Contacts made
	Contacts made

	Money	raised.	if re	elevant
ı	1.10110	. a.oca,

Gather participants' opinions and observations. This might be gathered through:

An evaluation handed to participants
during the event or an online survey sent afterwards

	A collation	of media	coverage
	/ Collacion	ormeana	coverage

Social media statistics: comments, shares, retweets, mentions and nev
followers

	Possibly	a small	number	ofinter	views
--	----------	---------	--------	---------	-------

	A debriefing	meetingo	f the orga	nisers
--	--------------	----------	------------	--------

If respondents are providing personal or contact information on the same form, a data protection statement should be included as they are providing feedback on an activity. This should explain how you will use this information, and comply with the new General Data Protection Regulations. The Information Commissioner's Office has published guidelines on this, including for charities, on its website at www.ico.org.uk

Before your event, discuss and agree what the questions to participants will be. Some of the kinds of questions you might ask are:

- Did the event meet your hopes and expectations?
- Was it thought provoking?
- Was there a high level/quality of speaker(s) and/or participants?
- Did you meet and talk with people of different faiths and belief traditions?
- What was, in your view, the best thing about the event/activity?
- How could the event/activity have been improved?
- What did you think of the event location/menu/facilities?
- What is your religion and belief background/gender/age?
- Would you come to such an event again/recommend to a friend?

When doing your evaluation, draw together the information and views that you have gathered. Reflect together as organisers on some overall questions such as:

- Did the event or activity bring together a new pattern of participants?
- Did it create new patterns of contact engagement?
- If it was a social action project, who did it help and in what ways?
- Did the event or activity stimulate debate or new thinking?
- Did it inspire a commitment to a follow-up activity?
- Did the event/activity raise awareness or build profile of your group/project/organisation?

Good evaluation is useful to you, because it can help you to improve your future event. It can also be useful to other people.

Aim to write up in a clear and simple style a short 'evaluation report' which explains what your event was, what the aims were, who attended, how you evaluated and what you found out.